JAMES MARLOWE

When I came back to the office after lunch she was sitting there. her feet close together like a schoolgirl, her bag gripped on her knees and the light reflecting from her plain horn-rims so that at first I couldn't see what color her eyes were. She was poised so tensely, with her heels off the floor that I had to look twice to see that her aboes were of the ballet-dancer type, in a pale brown. There was no lipstick and no decorations and the stockings were of the serviceable variety, though the legs they encased were pleasant enough. She stood up, blinking a little. She wore a brown dress of extreme simplicity and here_and there it had the faint shine of wear. It buttoned up to her throat but it had been made for her and it fitted her gently swelling hips and managed to suggest soft thighs. Only she wouldn't have liked it if I'd said anything about her thighs. I guessed that school teachers dislike remarks like that from strange men. If she wanted employment you would pick her out of a hundred as dependable, quiet, efficient and not likely to leave suddenly to get married.

She licked her lips before she spoke and then she said "What are your charges?"

I signed to her to sit down and I went round my desk and sat down myself. "It depends on what I get asked to do. Also how long it takes."

Out of kindness—being silly that way—I added, "And it sometimes depends on what the client can afford to pay."

She looked at the handbag and said, "I couldn't afford to pay much."

She started to get up but I waved her back again. She perched her slightly shiny situpon on the very edge of the chair.

"I'm listening," I suggested.

She licked her lips again. I was wishing that girls like her would realise that lipstick and pretty dresses exist not only for the pleasure of those who wear them. They also make life more bearable for those who have to look at them.

"I'm a secretary," she said.
"My name's Mary Curter. I work for Sylvia Parks."

From the way she looked I was supposed to know who Miss Parks was. But I didn't.

"She's a film-actress. She's only playing small parts now," she hastened on, "but she's good and she'll be famous soon. I know she will."

"Let's hope you're right, Miss Carter."

I remembered how in the gilded palaces of vice that New York and New Orleans sported in the nineteen hundreds they always had one or two startlingly ugly hags among the beautiful courtesans. It made the courtesans look even more beautiful by contrast. Maybe Miss Sylvia Parks had something of the same idea. I wouldn't know. A private detective has funny thoughts like that. Sometimes it's a useful habit.

"And what sort of trouble are you in, Miss Carter?"

"It isn't me, really. It's Miss Parks. Somebody is going to kill her."

"A film critic?"

She went very red.

"That wasn't funny and anyway I've always thought murder was a serious matter!" she snapped.

"I have an idea along those lines myself. Don't mind me. I have to sound tough. Inside I'm a blushing red rose."

She looked at me for some time. Then she went on,

"A man called her. Three times. I answered the phone. He said he had to speak to her personally. I said she was in the bath and couldn't come. He saidbe was rude-be said something I try to forget and insisted on talking to her. She came out of the bathroom just then and heard me talking and made me give her the phone. While the listened the went absolutely white. Then she put the phone down quickly and told me to get ber a drink. She was chaking like a leaf. I saked her what it was about and she said it was nothing. But the man rang again when she was out and I said she was out. And he laughed and said "Then take a message. sweetheart! Tell her I haven't made up my mind what day she's going to die but it'll be soon. Don't forget to tell her!" and he hung up. I told her and she made me swear I wouldn't do anything. I wanted to ring the police. But she went almost mad and said if I did she'd kill me. I've never seen her that way!"

I slid my arms round her waist. Vielding, lissome and warm, her stomach muscles rippled as she turned to me . . .

"And after that there was a third call?"

"Yes. And she was out again. He said 'Any time now, sweet-heart! And I am looking forward to it!' and he laughed and hung up."

I played with the blotter on my desk.

"Why do you say you can't afford much? Surely Miss Parks earns a good saalry."

"She doesn't know I'm here! I want to help her! I wanted her to come to a detective but she went mad on me again. So I came anyway."

She sat still like a parrot on a perch. Her brown hair was thick and parted on one side and caught up with a brown clip. I guessed her underwear would be totally uninteresting.

She said, "And then to-day there was a man hanging around outside, watching the apartment all the time she was at the studio. I'm scared! So I came to you."

"Where does she live?"

She told me. I knew the place. On top of some office buildings somebody had built a series of penthouse apartments and let them at high rent. You could have a party for two up there and only the sparrows would be shocked.

A girl could advance herself rapidly on the road to stardom away up among the stars themselves.

"Is she in there now?"

"No-she's at the studio."

'T'll come and see her at eight to-night." "She won't let you in."

"You know how to open a door, I guess?"

She pouted. "I won't be there. She doesn't like me staying in the evening."

Miss Parks had a point there, too, I reckoned. A school teacher around evenings would be like sitting up with your conscience.

"I see. When do you leave?"

She said, "I could stay as late as I dared—and then leave the front door unlocked."

"What about the street door?"

"There's a secret switch for that. Low down on the left lintel. Press and the door unlocks. It rings a bell upstairs but I'll disconnect that."

We looked at each other. I let myself unemotionally survey ber face. Maybe my expression was sour-l've been around. Her eyes were large and open, unblinking and misty. Mouths show more character than people think. I studied hers. The top lip had a soft flattening in the centre as if the still wore, as it were, her first kiss. With lipstick it could have been a touch of sensuousness. Without lipstick her mouth was still curiously exciting. Involuntarily the tip of my tongue was licking my own lips as I looked at hers, imagining the taste of them. I forced my eyes away from her mouth. Ridiculous to contemplate kissing such a plain Jane.

I squirmed in my sear, feeling somewhat like a schoolboy caught drawing lewd fantasies of his teacher without her clothes on. But my eyes had a mind of their own. They continued on a downward path. Her chin was small but firm, determined. But it was saved from ansterity by a disarming dimpled cleft in the center.

Her neck was a slim white column and I could picture it without that stupid brown dress covering it. I could picture that neck descending to shoulders of the same creamy texture, uncluttered by anything so mundane as a shiny brown dress. Then beneath the shoulders would be two soft mounds of quivering flesh. Even under the dress I could see them rise and fall with every breath she took. The thin cloth did little to hide the twin erect points—with an effort I tore my eyes away.

She began to get flushed under my scrutiny. She pointed to her beg and whispered, "About the money..."

I shrugged.

"Don't lose any sleep. I usually chisel some dollars out of some-body before I finish a case. If all clae fails I know an old woman across the tracks who keeps fifty iron men in some hiding place. Squatting her on the stove would soon make her talk. We'll discuss money later."

She looked at me for a long time.

"I hope you're all right," she said in the end.

"I'd hate to be what you'd call right," I said, "but I think you can trust me. Mother brought me up on strict honesty. Ask her she'll be out next month."

"Don't play games!" she said, getting up angrily. "This could be murder!"

"When it is we'll weep. I'll be there at eight. Don't wink at strangers on the subway—any of them might be That Man."

She looked at me once more as if she only had to wave to make the flies rise up from me in swarms. Then she took her bag and tried to smile and found she couldn't.

She went, closing the door carefully behind her shiny-worn flanks.

I sat and looked at it from various directions,

Man threatens starlet. Starlet doesn't grab some of the law she pays taxes for. So starlet must be afraid to. Ergo; starlet has probably been a wicked, naughty girl. Man is aware of starlet's wicked naughtiness. Man wants not starlet's death—which is only a test to see if she calls for the johns—but something else. And not what men usually want from starlets. What all people usually want from anybody.

I leaned back and thought some more.

I could have thought a lot about how vulnerable actresses are to suspicion. But instead I found myself thinking that it was a pity about the shine on that skirt. And I remembered that as she walked out the left stocking-seam was a little off-center. (I notice things like that. Nasty me.) That, too, was a pity. They were nice legs. I let myself think about that, In shorts of white sharkskin, say, brief enough and taut enough to display the first curves of what the shine had covered. Or maybe opera-length black hosiery, up, way, way up to emerald shorts and a topless something.

Something that wouldn't quite hide those sensitive little tips that insisted on making their presence known in spite of the ugly brown dress. Maybe one of those tubular knit affairs, strapless, the kind that have a habit of slipping down when there's swelling flesh inside begging to pop out. Begging to be touched, fondled, kissed.

I laughed at myself.

Maybe I should go back to first grade.

I got up, took my snood off the hook and went out. At the corner I took afternoon tea in the form of rye on the rocks.

I had dinner at my usual place where the Vienna steaks are good if you don't try to think what's gone into them. My mind still ran on legs. Legs and ivory thighs and to join one to the other, saffron-yellow garters.

I sat over a second rye on the rocks and thought further. There was a man who said that the Flatiron Building made him think of sex. He explained that it was because everything made him think of sex. I always felt that he and I would have been buddies. But this time it was more than that. A girl wears no lipstick. She dresses in a fusty suit and looks shocked if you say "bed" and faints if you make it a doublebed. And after she's gone you daydream of sleek legs in fabulous nylons, lit by firelight and revealed by a well-organized accident.

Somewhere it made sense but I couldn't get it. I wanted to get it so I went round to get the car and on the way I dropped in the sewer I laughingly called home and picked up That Thing—the one with the blue barrel and fluted grip that is bad for finger-prints. It fitted nicely in the small holster and didn't show when I put my coat on again.

It was a fair drive out to the apartment. I dawdled because it wasn't yet eight and also I wanted it to be dark.

I left the car at the corner of the block. It all had the look of office districts after hours. As if the plague-wagons had been round and removed all the bodies and all that needed to be done was just to disinfect the entire area. There were no dark sedans containing small men with dark hats and tiny moustaches. No big saloons with radio-antenane and searchlights and somebody smoking inside.

The door looked like an entry to offices. There was no knob. But I found the button—down on the left. There was a sigh like a protesting virgin—as quiet as that—and the door showed a crack of pale electric light. I pushed it open and started up the stairs. They were stone, unemotional and undecorative and as furtive as a postcard pedlar.

I went up silently for not quite five years, turning corner after corner.

Then there were stars on a velvet sky and expanses of roof, boxes of flowers, colored sunshades and little tables and in either direction illuminated penthouses, separated by rows of shrubs. The nearest was hers. That too was alight. The door was closed and the light spilled out from the other nide of the apartment where there was probabiy a glass door to walk out to the garden hand in hand to look at the stars and get away from all these people, darling. It was pretty silent.

I tried the door. It gave a little. School teachers never tell lies.

The little hallway was gay. On the wall a shallow vertical box was subdivided into a hundred shallower smaller boxes and each box was painted inside with a different color and contained a small china figure. A ballet dancer. A curled-up red setter. A nude girl. An elephant with scarlet caparison. A gay little jockey with round cheeks . . .

You could see into a long room that had walls of pink and a black ceiling and somebody breathing just out of sight, just around a corner, waiting and listening.

All the floors had one allover carpet of white. I could walk on that like a fly clumping about. I walked—but that Thing was in my hand by now.

He was standing close to the glass door, lit by a lamp on a low table, so his face had tiny creases like an actor near the footlights. He was young, dark and wore a dinner jacket of white.

He looked at me with eyes that were so wide open the whites gleamed like pobbles.

She lay on the sofe between us. Her shoes showed me the spike beels and the soles. I thought, funny how the soles always show only when you're dead, "Turn up your toes" is maybe a good expression. She was in white lame, her shoulders were bare and her hair was a chestnut torrent down to her arms. Her back was towards me. She had beautiful hips and the lame skirt was alit to the hollow behind one knee. Something had dripped to the white carpet in front of her. It could have been scarlet paint.

He looked at That Thing and his mouth—it was a weak, small mouth—quivered. I went over to him slowly.

He tried to grin. It came out a babyish snari. There was something on his hand that matched the pool on the floor. I had That Thing in his general direction. He didn't care for it much.

I was near enough now, I bent over her. The torrent of hair partly hid her face. I saw a mouth like an enamelied flower and long lashes that lay on the curve of her cheek like lilies on a grave. I looked at her mouth for a long time. Too long.

He must have had the glass door open. There was a breath of evening air, a stumble and he was gone.

I took three strides to the swinging glass door. He was only four yards away and he made a good target against the stars. I lifted That Thing. I fired twice to make certain. The acrid smell began to tinge the atmosphere and mingle like a dirty joke with her perfume.

I closed the glass door carefully and turned. The dead girl was sitting up, her eyes enormous and her hands on her pert bosom.

I said "Welcome back from judgment. How did you make out?"

"You-you-shot him!"

I blew down the barrel of That Thing, sniffed it like a bottle of brandy and put it back where it lived.

"Old Two-gun, they used to call me on the Border. They said of me that when I deaded 'em they stayed deaded. If I'd shot , you, for instance, you wouldn't be sitting up so soon—"

She kicked out with antin shoes and jumped up, white as her dress. She wasn't tall, I could see into the dividing cleft of her.

"Aren't you going to see if he's dead? Why don't we call a doctor?" She was on the verge of a scream.

"A doctor wouldn't help him any."

"God! What am I going to do?" she wailed.

"Try taking an aspirin. It's the only useful thing I can think of right now. You wanted a bodyguard. You have one. With a big gun."

She fought to gather her wits together. The struggle was visible. At last the enamelled lips smoothed out the wrinkles round them, the eyes returned to focus on me, she managed to smile.

"After all," she whispered,
"you did it. I was pretending—it was going to be a joke . . ."

"On me, sweetheart?"

She licked her lips.

"Yes."

"Just for the hell of it. Just to tell over the dinner-table. Just, maybe, to make a good story for the papers."

"Yes."

"It makes a better story this way. 'Homicide in starlet's penthouse apartment. Sylvin Parks held. Tells D.A. it was all a joke'."

A tiny bead of perspiration quietly glittered near the corner of her eye,

"You-you're in it, too."

"Yes. Right in it. A good way would be to iron you out too and leave the gun. 'Starlet kills lover—slays self. Double tragedy in love-nest'."

"You wouldn't!"

"It would let me out, sweetheart."

She moved closer. She was trembling all over.

That way I could see far, far down. That damned imagination of mine began to see visions of a white shape with arms that twined like snakes.

I said "I liked that dress from the first."

She looked startled. She looked down. Something leaped into her eyes and she moved one bare shoulder towards me and a little upwards as if she were going to kiss it.

"It is a nice dress," she murmured, putting on a different voice, a voice that Eve probably used when she carried something round and red to Adam. "It could so easily come off," she went on. "It just depends on a fastener under here."

She showed me. Her armpit was a smooth warm hollow.

"If you could do what I asked you to," she smiled.

"Get rid of him?" I asked.

She nodded quickly.

I slid my arms round her waist. Yielding, lissom and warm, her stomach muscles rippled as she turned to me.

Slowly, I kneaded the small of her back with my palms. Her breath began to come in short rapid pants. Any moment the few inches of white lame that were all that kept her from being truly Eve would slide down.

I drew back and held her at arm's length. I looked into her misty eyes.

I said, having termented her long enough, "Consider it done. In fact it is done. He's miles away."

"Don't-don't joke-I couldn't hear another wisecrack."

"I'm not joking. The time for joking is over. He's young. He can run. The way he ran for the stairs showed that. And he runs even better when a couple of slugs whistle around his ears."

"You-you didn't hit him?" she gasped.

"I didn't even try. Lipstick and white lame and a topicss dress change a girl a lot. But lipstick doesn't change the shape of a mouth, Miss Mary Carter. Or Sylvia Parks, whichever you prefer. I looked pretty closelymouths show character more than anything else. The joke was supposed to be on me, Mary-Sylvia--- Eve. Besides, I knew there was a gag in it long before that."

She sat down with her hands over her face and swayed a little.

"How-how did you know? I thought I acted the part beautifully."

"So you did. You looked like the working girl that heaven will protect. But after you'd gone I thought of bedrooms and it didn't connect. The girl Mary Carter was supposed to be should suggest flannel undies but my thoughts strayed to frilly nylon."

She was looking up now and she started to laugh, a nervous, relaxing laugh.

I drew her to her feet and pressed her close.

I said, "You promised that if I played it your way and disposed of the corpus delicti some pleasant things might happen."

She was trembling now but it wasn't fear this time.

She looked swimmy. She wet her lips and parted them a little.

I said, shaking my head, "Uhhuh! It was nice this afternoon. Mary Carter had something more than a stereotyped starlet. Couldn't' we tempt Mary to return?"

She stared a moment. Then she smiled her carmine smile.

She said, "I'll go call her."

While she was gone I mixed a drink. I felt I'd earned it. Also a lot more. While I was drinking it I drew the curtains over the glass door and went and locked the front door. I didn't fancy the corpse coming back to see how things were working out.

When she came back she stood shyly in the doorway. Her lipstick was gone. She turned slowly, posing. Her seat still shone, even in the softer light. She even wore the little hat.

This time I had to go to her. I had to bend her back and turn her face to me. But in the middle of the kiss her knees began to go droopy, her mouth began to urge itself on me.

The school teacher said, in a whispering contralto, "This dress isn't so easy to unfasten as the other one."

I said "I like it that way-Mary."

NUDISM — ON AND OFF STAGE

- The Bare Facts -

CARLSON WADE

A bevy of bare breasted females are twisting and contorting their bodies in rhythm, while fully clothed men are watching. The male faces are aglow with joy at the sight of the soft melon formed breasts, the lyre shaped hips and peaches and cream skin. It is sheer heavenry joy to see the naked lovelies in the near altogether.

At the same time, another group of nudies are playing volleyball—or swimming, completely naked. Their healthy skin is glowing in the bright sunshine—in a few moments, these lovely naked girls are joined for a game by a few virile looking men who are every bit as naked as their partners.

Are these dreams? Or, as head-shrinkers put it, are these visions of a wish-fulfillment? None! The truth is that the first scene occurs on the stage of a night club or buriesque theatre. The bare breasted girls are stripteasers and the fully clothed men are in the audience, enjoying the spectacle of undraped ferume flesh.

The second scene occurs in a bonafide midist camp. Both females and the males (according to the strict rules) must be stark naked. They think nothing of it, so they claim. They enjoy one another's naked company in the bright sunlight.

is there may difference in the enjoyment of nudity-on the stage of in a gudist camp? An emphasic YES. The truth is that sex means nude and nude means sex. These two are interchangeable. The mea (and women) who go to a strip-tease house do so because they are motivated by the sex instinct. They become erotically aroused when they view near-naked girls in performance before them. Something of the "peeping Tom" instinct receives gratification as they sit in the audience or around tables and watch a silky blonde-haired girl under the spotlight, slowly divesting herself of one garment after the other As her legs become paked, there is a quickening of the pulse. Then, as her chest becomes undraped and her huge breasty mounds suddenly plop into view, there are gasps and gapes. When the stripper reaches a stage of virtual nudity (except for a G-strang) there is the ultimate in erotic standartion.

Let's now look at the same situation in a nudest camp. The members are usually screened by a special admissions committee and then they are permeted to enter the "forbidden" sun grounds. Here, they are first shown to their rooms or cabins and given the express orders to divest themselves completely of their clothes —and only when they are fully naked (no G strings, no pasties or fig teaves, if you please), are they permitted to join the other happy nudists. The emotions experienced are quite different from those enjoyed when you are fully clothed, and watch nakedness before you. In a nudist camp, you are just as naked as the others and this creates a different form of crotica. It may serve as gratification of your exhibitionistic instinct, but the grotic thrill is not as turged as if you watch nakedness but do not participate. The "forbidden" angle seems to weaken in a nudist camp. Some of the mystery is gone.

... How do you like your audism? . . .

Wholesome, ant-doorsy?

. Or partly covered, strip-teasy?

Nudism in a theatre or night club invariably provokes much more erotic response. A glance at some of the patrons who become absorbed with the peeler's actions, whose eyes (and emotions) follow her long-legged movements, the highly scintillating bump and grind which is erotic-symbolism, will reveal their sensuous thoughts. Some patrons give very obvious evidence of erotic arousal when they watch strippers performing in a little skit or act. This is good! It shows that the strapper is successful... Her pear-naked body, clad in a G-string and pasties, is a symbol of virility and potency. Some peclers will wiggie their flaring hips, naked as can be, and raise the blood pressure of the clothed watchers in the andience. The very atmosphere of a strip-tease house is that of sensuousness.

Now, take the same girls, strip them of their fig leaf and pasties, put them in a shallow swimming poor and let some of the patrons (now fully naked) join them. What is their reaction? That of —and only when they are fully wholesome, clean sport. Nudity naked (no G strings, no pasties loses some of its mystery when it or fig seaves, if you please), are is completely exposed and prethey permutted to join the other sented to you without any happy nudists. The emotions ex"tease."

The truth is that there is much more sensuous arousal in a partially clothed female than there is in the same girl who sits beside you on the lawn of a nudist camp. You have "nothing left to the magination" in the case of the latter. Everything is completely visible—everything on others and on yourself, too. Therein lies the difference between these two forms of nudity.

Perhaps you have glauced at nudist magazines and decided that a visit to such an establishment would be very exciting. You feel that it is bester than a visit so a strip-tease theatre because. after all, if you enjoy seeing stage audity with pastles and a G-string. you'll emply off-stage nudity with Nature's glones in full exposure. But the enjoyments are different On stage, the element of mystery adds to the excitement. Something is held away from you. Forbidden fruit which may not be seen, touched or possessed.

In a modist camp, the forbidden frust is fully exposed and you are left with empty thoughts. Furthermore, on-stage mudity is based on erotic impulse. The revolving of the girl's hips as she prepares to do a back-splitting BUMP The bouncing of her huge chest globes in their fish net bra, the music and the play of lights on the body-all are designed to appeal to the erotic impulse. Off-stage audity is the reverse—in an official mudist camp, the movement of the body is sparked by Nature's aesthetic unpulses. No exaggerated physical

At Your Sout Deafer or Order From:

EPIC PUBLISHMA CO., Dage SA 1674 Brandway, New York 19, N. Y. her soft, coral-upped breasts, as doing this just for YOU. The entire atmosphere is drenched with pleasurable sex and gratification of the erotic unpulse. This, most certainly, can arouse your emotions much more than a nondescript girl who asks you to join her in a game of chess in a shady spot of a mudist camp.

Margaret Mead, the well known sociologist, once wrote, "Nudista are attempting to create a world in which it's all right to look, but not to touch." This is trueexcept, who wants to touch what you can see to front of you all day long? Furthermore, maybe what she has, you don't even want to touch?

Nudism in a camp tends to deemphasize sex. They regard the human body as strictly utilitarian. It is well known that clothing on the female automatically stirs a desire to see that female naked. If that same woman is seen in a nudist park, completely pecled, her nakedness becomes ordinary -no mystery prevails. She is sumple one more naked girl among many other naked humans. The curiosity to see what lies beneath the gown or dress is now evaporated.

Modesty is an emotion that can stimulate almost anyone. In fact, on-stage nudity is often made more scintillating if the peeler feigns shyness. True, the audience is fully aware that this is just an act but they love to dream it is for real. The peeler who openly admits she is so bashful, so shy about taking off her clothes, will stir the vitals of nearly the entire audience. It adds spice and gmger.

In a modist camp, modesty is tossed to the ground with the full clothing outfit Without modesty, the girl is no longer a sizken. legged, C-cup babe to be mentally stripped and conquered. She's a whole female. The curiosity is gone so let's have a thrilling game of volicybail.

A prominent authority on nudism has stated that this group of naked fun in the sun is devoted to two purposes; to break the body taboo, and to atimulate the desire for healthful family recreation. Furthermore, said this authority, the very foundation of nudism is built on the premise that the nudity-sex complex must be done away with What a horrible pightmare! Take away the mystery, so what's left?

Conversely, a leading spokesman for nudity on stage in the form of entertainment has said that strip-teasing or exposure of the body beautiful in a theatre is devoted to one single purpose, to sumulate the erotic impulses of the patrons in attendance. This is a most delightful experience. That's why strep-tense houses and acts are increasing by leaps and bounds throughout the country.

Nuclism in a private camp is supposed to dispel the so-called puntameal curiosity about the differences of the two sexes. Is this so exciting? No-it's exactly the reverse. It's so completely devoid of pleasurable passion, that we wonder why nudists ever bother to get married. Why should curiosity be eliminated? It takes all the fun out of things. In fact, nudism in a theatre is designed to stimulate your curiosity-that's why you become so stimulated when enjoying a lovely blonde slowly revealing her sensuous parts. You're curious . . and excited, too. It's so enjoyable to glimpse the forbidden!

Nudists are open-faced about their beliefs. For example, an article in the American Nudist Leader (March, 1959) declared, "One of the prime facts of nudism is the ability of men and women to gather together without clothes and without having sexual interests and emotions aroused." Well, if that's the best nudism has to offer, who wants at?

A glance at most nudist magazines will show you a majority of naked girls in various provocative poses. Very few nude men are shown . . . or, if they do appear in photos, they are usually aged, physically unattractive and otherwise non-descript. The emphasis upon well-shaped young garls with control shaped breasts. dimpled buttocks, heart-shaped red lips, is designed to attract thates. It is well known that the erotic impulse in the male as aroused when he visualizes femmine mudity. In the female, her imphases become stimulated when she is being caressed, made love to, fondled and kissed. She derives little or no stimulation in viewing a naked male. To be sure, there is some voyeurism (or "peeping Jane" instinct in the femaie) but this is a mild response. For this reason, pudist magazines emphasize females because they know their audience will be argely males, who delight in viewing the nude flesh of the opposité šéx.

On the other hand, nudist camps appear to be largely populated by females. Where are all the red-blooded American males who yearn to see female flesh in the raw? Hiding behind their ciothes. You may not believe it but the average male is instructively shy about stripping naked. His erotic impulses are revealed because of his external physical development. As for females, no matter what they may be thinking. you cannot know it because there are no outward signs of sexual arousal as there would be in the mate-who, as stated above, has a certain peculiar modesty about revealing his ardor; except in situations where he can obtain granfications. For this reason. male nudists are frequently in the minority-except those who are devout believers in the sextessness of the body.

Nuclism on the stage is perfectly enjoyed by male patrons, and females, since in the case of the former, it is expected that they be crotically aroused and although clothes will obscure their desires, they feel they have nothing to be ushamed of, anyway. After all, a strip-trase is a delightful form of entertainment and what kind of a man would be be if he didn't feel himself responding!

The spectacle of theatrical nudism, with choice performers wearing skin-tight revealing clothes which will slowly be shed to expose lovely breasts as round as beach bath may well be more entertaining than playing tenne with a nude girl—who is as nude as yourself and a hundred others

Can you have your cake and eat it, too? Yes! Here's howenjoy the pleasure of strip-teasing or theatrical nudity; then, g' home and enjoy an arm-charvisit to a nudist camp, via the lavishly colored fun-in-the-supublications. Modesty—it's sheeheaven!

... TARA ...

One of the latest arrivals on the New York glamour scene is caremel-skinned Tara. A native of Takits. Tara came to New York with a touring troup of dancers and singers — and stayed because the metropolitan way of life offered more opportunities for her talents.

Tara's talents are many. A "temptress" in the grand manner, she has a large collection of hand-made leather outfits like the ones she models on these pages. She uses the costumes and props as part of her ritualistic song and dance routine. The dance is a frenzy of authentic Tahitian movements, the song a low exciting chant.

Some gale fib about their age, but Tara doesn't have to — she's only twenty-two. As for her measurements, those aren't faked either: she's a firmly packed, gloriously stacked 38-22-36.

Mademo selle Barr is a coquette in the real French manner. With a toss of her raven locks of a sly wink she can make the onlooker want to grab the very next plane to Paris!

SATANA No. 6's featured model is Lisa Reed, whose four beauty is accentuated by her reserved, almost haughty bearing. Looks deceive, however, in Lisa's case, because in actuality she is both wurm and witty. An avid reader and conversationalist, Lisa can hold her own in the fastest repartee, yet all the while manages to retain her allure and femininity.

A CANDID REVIEW OF THE SEASON'S MOST CONTROVERSIAL FILM by Betty Edwards

It is a rare occasion when a play is adapted to the screen and retains the plot, the original interpretation of the characters, and even the sets. This is especially unusual when the play is what is known as a "psychological drama," as was Jean Genet's THE BALCONY. So it was with great surprise and intense enjoyment that I viewed the film version of THE BALCONY. I had seen the play twice when it opened at the Circle in the Square in New York City in Murch, 1960. At that time it kindled a controversy that continued throughout its two year run. Reactions ran from "fantastic" and "brighant" to "outrageous" and "shocking," the motion picture based on this unique play has ignited the controversy again.

The exceptionally talented Grayson Hall played the part of the "madam" in the play. This role in the screen version is acted effectively by Shelley Winters, but she lacks the subtity, the impression of passion rigidly controlled by cynicism, which Miss Hall gave the character. However, this is more than compensated for by the rest of the cast, especially Peter Falk, Lee Grant, and Ruby Dee.

The picture is done with a great deal of commutation magination, using basically only one setting, a brothel, deverly interspersed with newsreel shots of mohacenes.

As revolt rages in the city streets, business continues as usual in the highly unusual brothe, run by Irma (She,ley Winters)

A vast, converted sound stage divided into various "sets," Irma's establishment caters to her clientele's frustrations and compaissons.

With back-screen projection, sound effects, exotic costumes, realistic props and a versatile staff, Irma seals dreams to those unable to find them elsewhere.

Among them is the unorthodox Greek Orthodox "bishop" (Jeff Corey), a gas company employee in real site. At Irms's he done vestments to be transformed and transported by the "confessions of a fair pentient (Joyce Jameson) supplied by the madam.

There is also the milk man (Kent Smith) who, once inside the brothel becomes a general wearing a magnificent uniform while I stepping entrapt to his marrial triumphs, recounted by his "horse". Armette Jens), another of Irma's specialists.

And there is the accountant who dreams of being Chief Justice (Peter Brocco). In his judicial robes, defere a cardhoard jury, he meter out adgements on such prisoners (Ruby Dec) as Irrus supplies

As the fighting moves closer from closes her doors. Whichever way the battle goes, the knows business will be good, once the dust has settled.

Irma's secretary confidence and special friend is Carmer (Lee Grant) who yearns to quit her ever car duties and return to the more creative work performed by Irma's other girls. Irma is pointing out all who has done for Carmer when the door alarm sounds.

It's the Chief of Police. Peter Falk), battle stained and alightiv wounded.

His fury excites the madam and her secretary. He is namest succumbing to their overtures when Roger his rival comes to the brothe. Defeated the robe scader (Leonard Nimo), has brought his startered dreams to Irina to be mended, to doe the Chief's extra uniform for a brief. Husbon of power

A though pleased that at last somebody wants to play him, the Chief considers Rogers stul dangerous. He interrupts flarmer a sensual advances to the rebel, and the two leaders meet face to face.

Wit le conducting an academic discussion, they watch warfly for an opening, then suddenly grapple and fall to the floor from a gar a converge on the struggling men, awarm over them ripping their in farms to shreds Both are dearly taken more saved by firms a intercention.

Irms was not allow Death, the one ust mate reality, in her place. It's bad for lus ness

Clad only at he bath towers she has supplied, the two readers leave her establishment amaily engrossed in a discussion of the ramification of Power Bearing renewed gunfare, they stop and eye one shoties suspections y. Then, agreeing that it comes "from some other faction, either right or reft wing," they part cordially

And, as she closes the big doors. Irms turns to the audience tells them, too, to go borne where the illusions they practice are even more false than those she sells at the Balcony

This is a work of real psychological import, daring, and imagination. For this utmost credit must be given to Genet, to Ben Macklow, who adapted the film for the screen, and to Joseph Strick who directed Definitely not for the "family" THE BAI CONY is, nevertheless a horough delight for sophisticated audiences.

BEST SHOWGAL

Dear Eduor

The best dancer and showgal in the business is Gilda. I notice that you keep getting requests for news of this exotic best and for new pictures of her. As a your readers know by now, she was once the curly headed little moppet in "Our Gang Comedies.

Enclosed are some unusual pictures of the fubulous woman. The costume and make-up she's wearing are designed by her (she's got all kinds of talents!) and she calls he make the Ensemble for the Space Age. If women in the future look like his I hope I live a long tie

Good luck with your magazines. Yours truly,

"SEARCH"

Dear Editor

Severa, years back . I was in NYC for a convention. A gang of us went on a round of all the rute clubs in Greenwich Village Must confess we got pretty soused so the evening is a blur to me. But one girl, a dancer and surger, stands out in my mind. She was playing to an all-colored show. She has very light tan skin and a beautiful face and figure. Once you printed some pictures of her but did not give her name, I chipped out one and am sending it to you. Hope you will identify it and print others you have of her Every time I go back to NYC I search for her but was beginning to think she was a mirage until I saw the pictures in your magazine. Please settie this so I can get some sleep It's gotten to this beautiful woman haunts my dreams.

L H Kansas City

(Your search will not end here because the girl you're looking for is tovely Mary Smith, who was working at New York's Club Savannah at the time you were in NYC Since them Miss Smith has dropped out of sight Here are some pictures taken before she disappeared from the show biz scene —Ed)

"BEST ARTIS!"

Dear Editor

You used to print a lot more drawings and cartoons by Bilbrew & Eneg. Stanton is very good also but the first "cheese-cake" drawings I ever tiked were by Bilbrew & Eneg. If you have any new ones, please print them.

You might be interested to know that I have a fairly large collection of drawings by these artists. They make great decorations for my den. I think Bi, brew is one of the very best artists in the field.

"ORDINARY"

Dear Editor

Some of those letters you get slay me. What these kooks seem to miss in that it isn't what the girl wears that makes her sexy, it's the girl herself

To prove my point, enclosed is a snapshot of my girl, wearing ordinary clothes, and yet managing to look inviting as all get out.

To each his own ... let those who want it have their crazy costumes. I'll take a good looking gal in ordinary duds — or, better still, none at ail! — any day

Got my first copy of your magazine, issue No. 4, and am eager to get the back ones and all future ones.

In your "Epistles to Inferno" column, another reader, R. L., wrote that he likes "dominant females," and asked you to print some of your best. On page 42, you printed pictures of a fascinating model. My question is, who is she? And would you print some more pictures of her?

Hope to see many more of your entertaining and exciting magazines on the stands . . . I'll buy them all if this is a sample'

"BIZARRE"

Dear Editor

The word "bizarre" has come to have more than one meaning, as you seem to understand. The costumes some of your models wear are ready "far out" How about one of a true Salana type, wearing mask, wide collar, etc. These adornments make a woman look mysterious and much more interesting than the ordinary bra-and-panties so many pin-up models wear

"ONE MORE REQUEST"

Dear Surs.

If you have room to print this letter please grant my request. I would like to see a picture of a dominant . . . female wearing those terrific spike heals. Six or seven inches high. If possible.

There is something particularly exciting about those shoes . . . You should put out a magazine with girls wearing those in every photo

Dear Editor:

Saw some photos of Lonnie Young in another of your publications, "Striparama," and think you should put her m "Satana" instead. After all, she has not been on the stage for some time as a stripper, but the "satanic" quality she has is stal there. In addition the is my ideal woman. So I would greatly appreciate seeing any more photos you may have of her

Dear Sus

Enclosed is a sampshot of may girl friend. She has also written you a note giving you permission to print it if you want to.

She wants to be a pin-up model The two of us have a lot of fun making pictures of her. She thinks I ought to buy a polaroid so we can see how the pactures come out, right away. I tell her I may someday, but the truth is I would hate to miss the fun of having her help me develop them in the dark room. Do you blame me? I'm afraud if I let her become a model too many other guys might feel the same way What's your advice?

Yours truly. G.T.F.Miami, Fla.

"SWEATER GIRL"

Dear Sirs:

Enclosed is a snapshot of my wife taken last summer. I just want to show you a girl does not have to be nude to be sexy. As you can see in this picture, she is wearing a sweater and petticoat but looks more appealing than a lot of your naked models.

There was a time when the "Sweater Girl" was the American ideal. Now nudes seem to be the thing. Even the bathing suits one sees on the beaches these days leave little to the imagination. When will women learn that the unknown excites a man more than the obvious.?
